On-demand printing

aka direct-to-garment

On-demand printing (aka direct-to-garment) allows for products to be printed one at a time, meaning they can be produced and shipped with no upfront inventory. It also does great with full color prints, like photographs.

Pros

- Made to order. No inventory or pre-orders required.
- Can print full color images
- Best prices for lower volumes

Cons

- Colors aren't quite as bright as screen printing
- Prints fade slightly over time

Pricing

Price varies depending on number of print locations.

Screen printing

Screen printing is known for producing bright, vibrant prints and for its unbeatable pricing at high volumes. Almost all printed clothing you see in retail stores are produced via screen printing.

Pros

- Bright, vibrant prints
- Longest lasting prints
- Lowest prices at higher volumes

Cons

- 50+ minimum order required
- Expensive at lower volumes
- Maximum of 9 colors
- Takes two weeks to produce

Pricing

Price varies depending on number of print areas, number of ink colors, and units sold.

All-over printing

aka sublimation

All-over printing (sublimation) is a technique that allows full-color printing on all surfaces of a garment. Each item is cut & sewn to order (no minimums).

Pros

- Cut and sewn to order (no minimums)
- Vibrant colors

Cons

- Can be expensive
- Doesn't work for 100% cotton garments

Pricing

One price regardless of design.

Embroidery

Embroidery produces beautiful stitched graphics with a premium look and feel. Great for a premium but understated feel.

Pros

- Stitched to order (no minimums)
- Bright colors
- Premium look and feel

Cons

- Maximum of 5 thread colors
- Doesn't work for complex designs
- Maximum size of 4" by 4"

Pricing

Pricing is flat regardless of design, up to a maximum size of 4" by 4"

FOR SELLING PRODUCTS WITH MINIMUM ORDER REQUIREMENTS

Holding inventory vs

Pre-order campaigns

The classic approach. Items are produced in advance, stored in a warehouse, then shipped out as orders are received.

Allows fans to pre-order products over a limited time, after which all the orders are produced at once and shipped directly to customers.

Pros

- Orders ship fast, usually within 24 hours

Cons

- You have to know how many items you want to produce and pay to produce those items
- You have to wait for the items to be produced before you can start selling
- Costs more than pre-orders campaigns due to storage of items ($2/month per sq cubic foot)

Pros

- No upfront costs or risk
- Start selling right away (unless you want to wait for samples).
- Produce the perfect number of products
- Limited-edition products tend to sell more

Cons

- Fans have to wait for the items to be produced before they are shipped (exact time depends on product)
